Dec 27, 2015 · Vaslav Nijinsky was a prodigy whose astonishing leap and provocative choreography gave him the status of a rock star in early 20th-century Paris. But he was essentially a shy and awkward man. After a disastrous marriage and an acrimonious break-up with his lover Serge Diaghilev, which ended his career with the Ballets Russes, he descended into

The Diary of Vaslav Nijinsky (1968), edited by Romola Nijinsky, includes drawings made during the years in mental institutions and has painful-to-read recitations of what is called "Reflections on Life, Death, and Feelings" in which Vaslav identifies himself with God and calls out for peace and love.
Nijinsky, Vaslav v?släf´ ny?zh?n´sk? [key], 1890–1950, Russian ballet dancer and choreographer; brother of Bronislava Nijinska. Nijinsky is widely considered the greatest dancer of the 20th cent. and was ballet's first modernist choreographer. He entered the Imperial Ballet School, St. Petersburg, in 1900 and made his debut in 1907.

Dancer. He will be remembered as an early 20th century ballet dancer who ushered in a modern era of dance. He was known for his gravity-defying leaps and en pointe, which is rarely performed by a male dancer who has to support all his body on the tip of fully extended feet ...
In Bakhchisarai, in the harem, the girl cries over her fate, remembers her former happiness and rejects the love of the Khan. She dies, however, from the hand of Ghirei’s jealous wife. In the final scene Ghirei is seen mourning her death by the Fountain of Tears which he built for the beautiful Maria.
